Dear Ms. Taylor,

Today editorial article "More lies from Tehran" (April 1, 2004) is quite accurate. What extra evidence does the International community need to be convinced that the Iranian regime is making an A-bomb?

It looks like they do not have enough time to decide what it must be done to stop it. According to Iranian opposition, 2005 is the year that Iran will have enough material to make a nuclear weapon. The Iranian opposition was the one who disclosed Iran's Uranium enrichment facilities in Natanz for the first time. Iran is now capable of making missiles with a range of more than 800 miles. By 2005 the world may add a new member to the nuclear club. That would be a disaster for the peace and stability of the world and for the Iranian people.

Imagine what a terrorist regime armed with an atomic bomb can do.

It is possible that the international community is hesitant to send the Iran's dossier to United Nation Security Council because of the failure of finding weapons of mass destruction in Iraq. But Iraq and Iran are two different issues. If the occupying forces could not find any solid evidence it does not discredit the intelligence on Iran. The pieces of the Iran's nuclear puzzle are coming together and there is not enough time to lose.

Time has come to put an end to the crimes committed by the Islamic Republic of Iran. Daily demonstrations and strikes in Iran show the will and determination of the Iranian people to overthrow Mullahs by any means. A good way is demanding the Islamic Republic of Iran to agree for to a free referendum, where the Iranian people can choose the regime they want.

A free and peaceful Iran means the end of terrorism era that started from 1979. On the other hand an Iran with an Atomic bomb means unleashed violence and terrorism all around the world. Take your pick.
