With Limited Options, Trump Seeks Strategy as Iran Standoff Escalates
President Trump's last-minute decision to pull back from a retaliatory strike on Iran underscored a lack of appealing options to counter Tehran's nuclear program.
The administration is relying on economic sanctions, but has begun to experiment with more aggressive options, including cyberattacks.

Iranian Americans rally in Washington for regime change — by Iranians

Thousands of Iranian Americans attended a recent rally in Washington and had one of their appeals answered Monday: President Trump sanctioned Iran's Supreme Leader Ali Khamenei... "They spoke in support of increased sanctions, including on the supreme leader, and called for the Ministry of Intelligence and Security, responsible for repressing protests inside the country and planning attacks on dissidents abroad, to be declared a foreign terrorist organization... The White House did take notice of the Iranian American voices outside the building. On CBS's Face the Nation Sunday, Vice President Mike Pence discussed the administration's Iran policy and said, "What we want to do is stand with the Iranian people, thousands of whom gathered outside the White House on Friday, and thousands of whom took to the streets last year in communities across Iran."

Iranian Americans call for regime change, sanctions in D.C. protest June 21, 2019

Thousands of Iranian Americans rallied outside the U.S. State Department and White House in Washington, D.C., on Friday to push for a regime change and increased sanctions on Tehran.... Maryam Rajavi, president-elect of the National Council of Resistance of Iran, spoke from Europe by video feed. She presented a 10-point plan to push democracy in Iran. "Yes, the disgraceful demonization campaign against the Iranian Resistance in the pro-appeasement media seeks to perpetuate the narrative that the people of Iran are better off with the theocratic rule of the mullahs; There is no alternative, and don't even think or talk about it," she said.
